NOTE.

No complete examination of the relation of the chief Versions of the Old Testament to the original Hebrew has been made with especial reference to the Book of Zephaniah. Dr. Zandstra has in the following Essay supplied this want with much care and discretion.

INTRODUCTION.

§ I. It is proposed in the following pages to study the text of Zephaniah in the light of the ancient primary versions. This study was undertaken largely to become familiar with Old Testament Criticism—a field of which it is peculiarly true that orientation is possible only at first hand. The choice of so short a text is vindicated by the almost unanimous verdict of scholars that the work of the translators of these versions is very uneven in quality. It is in fact still a moot question whether the Minor Prophets were translated into Greek by one individual or by many; and the arguments that have been advanced¹ to show that the Peshitta is not really a deliberate translation, but rather the final stereotyped form that traditional renderings of various origins assumed, have never been satisfactorily met. The reasons for the choice of this particular text are two. (a.) Though the Hebrew of Zephaniah presents many difficulties, no complete study of its text corresponding to such work as has been done on Micah by Ryssel² seems ever to have been made. (b.) In critical commentaries it always occupies a subordinate place among the Minor Prophets, and in textual studies it is entirely overshadowed by the more important books of the division of the Canon to which it belongs.³ This neglect, whatever its explanation may be, makes Zephaniah a good choice for a textual study. As it would be fatal presumption for one to ignore the work of predecessors, whether it bore directly or indirectly on one's theme, it goes almost without saying that all available sources of information have been carefully examined and freely laid under tribute. That which is presented, while based on original investigation, has thus also of necessity the virtue of being a more or less complete digest of the work of others.¹

§ II. Because Old Testament Criticism is still for many reasons a wilderness through which each one must in large part blaze his own trail, it seems necessary to preface the statement of the method chosen in this examination by some more general remarks that shall not only explain it, but also justify its use.

(A.) The thesis that all extant Hebrew sources for the text of the Old Testament, both in manuscript and in print, go back to a first century archetype, was first advanced by Lagarde in 1863. The chief supports of this thesis are the remarkable uniformity that is found in the manuscripts on the one hand, and the supposedly large number of corruptions in the text on the other. These two phenomena are mutually exclusive in an ancient document that has been accurately transmitted from its autograph, and their conjunction in this case is said to demand a comparatively late date for the common source to which all manuscripts and printed editions converge. The date of this hypothetical archetype is fixed in the first century by certain external characteristics that the text presents and by known facts in Jewish History.² Strack, who about thirty years ago could pass over this view in silence,³ states in his article on the Text of the Old Testament in

² In a few characteristic paragraphs (Symmicta, II, pp. 120, 121), intended primarily to show that this thesis was entirely original with himself, Lagarde incidentally gives a brief account of how it had been received by scholars up to 1880. It appears that Olshausen had independently reached a very similar view through a different process of reasoning. Cf. further Swete, Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek, pp. 313-320; W. R. Smith, Old Testament in the Jewish Church, p. 56; Driver, Notes on the Hebrew Text of Samuel, pp. xxxix ff.

Hastings' Dictionary of the Bible that it is accepted by most moderns. He himself does not accept it, but holds that the custom of consigning manuscripts that had been damaged by the tooth of time, by fire, or by water, or that were found to contain more than a certain number of mistakes, to the so-called genizah, which was generally a room in the cellar of a synagogue, is sufficient to explain all the phenomena. This thesis, whether true or not, offers striking proof that the present Hebrew text gives but scant aid in tracing its own history beyond a certain point, or in fixing its earliest form. Moreover, there are but few manuscripts, of which none are very old, and textual types—the chief material for the criticism of texts—are thus not to be found.¹ But it is a cardinal principle of criticism that to recover the true text of an ancient document it is first necessary to know its history; and that manuscripts, although the text which they contain is undated and unlocalized, generally furnish the primary data for reconstructing this history with the help of versions, which serve in a secondary capacity to fix the time and place of origin of the different textual types that the manuscripts present. In the Old Testament, however, there are no types of text in regard to which versions can be made to indicate a choice, but they themselves become the principal data. Instead of being called on to show from which particular type of two or more existing types it was made, a version must surrender the text on which it was based, in order that it may then be decided whether that text agrees with or differs from the single Hebrew textual type. Because a version must thus itself yield the text from which it was made, Old Testament Criticism is complicated by all the variable factors necessarily connected with translation and translators.

(B.) Languages are for the most part so different in genius that translation from one into another is often impossible without theft from the thought of the first or assault upon the idiom of the second. The vagaries of translators are also all but incalculable. In testing one's retranslation of a reading the dividing line between the necessary use of the Hebrew text for guidance and prejudicial dependence upon it is hard to locate. Because he cannot entirely penetrate the structural difference of the two dead languages, the critic is inclined to find variants where none exist; and in obvious disagreements he is apt to make too little allowance for the translator whose mental processes he cannot sufficiently follow, and whose knowledge and ability he cannot accurately gauge. Enough has been said to show that the "peculiarities of each translator, the character of his translation, and the knowledge of both languages displayed" by him—information in regard to these matters can of course be gained only by comparisons both within and beyond the limits of the book being studied¹—are determining factors in the evaluation of his version. It is also evident that the large factor of ignorance by which the critic is necessarily handicapped establishes in all doubtful cases a strong presumption in favor of the agreement of the current Hebrew with the source of a version.²

(C.) The necessity of freeing the text of each version from inner corruptions by tracing it as far back as possible is patent. Neither the Vulgate, Peshitta nor Septuagint can, however, be carried back to the time of their origin,³ and it is therefore necessary to seek such help as early quotations can give. The mutual relation of the versions has an important bearing on their value as witnesses, and consequently the presence or absence of interdependence must be established.

§ III. The method of procedure adopted in the present inquiry is based on the above considerations. The history of the versions has been separately discussed to locate and establish the best obtainable text of Zephaniah in each. The equivalents, which are obviously due to the character of the translation or to linguistic necessity, and those which must, because of the absence of evidence to the contrary, be ascribed to the characteristics or nuances of the translator, have been grouped together, and for the Vulgate presented in a summary, for the Peshitta and Septuagint exhibited in toto. The question of interdependence has been considered, and such readings as have demanded individual consideration have been discussed. Thus the versions have been summoned to show cause why they should be regarded as aids in the criticism of the text of Zephaniah, and not rather as worthy monuments of ancient interpretation. Whether they vindicate their value for criticism or not, they can help to fix the history of the Hebrew text only to the time when the earliest of them was made. Beyond this point, if the text obtained does not commend itself as a true copy of the autograph, external criticism by the help of translations must yield to Conjectural Criticism. A tree only the top of which is visible above some obstruction illustrates quite accurately what can be known of the text of Zephaniah. The angles of convergence must indicate where the continuation of the trunk is, and where branches and trunk join. The present investigation thus resolves itself into a test of the Hebrew transmission at three points, the exact location of which is unknown. This somewhat anticipatory statement has, it is hoped, outlined with sufficient clearness the general trend of the discussion and vindicated the method employed.

§ IV. The little that the Hebrew text in editions and manuscripts offers may be at once presented.¹ חזקיה—R. חלקיה, cf. Peshitta; אמן—R. אמין, due to the accidental joining of the strokes for ם and final ן. שׂאר—K. (3 MSS.) שם, cf. R. וגות, to avoid possible confusion due to asyndeton. 1⁶ גנות—R. וגות, error of vision. 1⁹ בקשו—G. B. בקשו. 1⁸ על השרים—R. על כל השרים, error of memory, cf. 1⁴. 1¹² בעת—R. ביום, cf. Septuagint. 1¹⁶ ערים—R. חרים, error of hearing, frequent with gutturals. 2¹ התקוששו—B. התקוששו. 2² כמץ—T. W. כמוץ; בטנם clause (3) omitted, R. (6 MSS.), K. (8 MSS.), homoioteleuton. 2⁴ יגְרֹשׁוּהָ—B. יגְרֹשׁוּהָ. 2⁷ שבותם—M. שבתם (G. does not point this word). 2⁹ גוי—R. גוים, error of memory, cf. 1⁴; יבוזם—W. יבוזם. 2¹² חרבי—R. חרב, cf. Peshitta. 2¹⁴ קָאָת—B. קָאָת; בכף—M. בכף; רָאָשׁוּ, odd expression, occurring here only, changed to the usual one. 3¹ מוראה—G. B. מראה. 3² לא—R. ולא, cf. 1⁴; אל—R. ואל, cf. 1⁴. 3⁴ פוחים—T. פוחים. 3⁹ לעברו—R. ולעברו, cf. 1⁴. 3¹⁰ בת פוצי omitted, R. (1 MS.), K. (1 MS.), cf. Septuagint and Peshitta. 3¹⁴ ועליו—B. ועליו. 3¹⁵ איבני—R. איבני, error of memory, cf. 1⁴; תיראי—M. R. K. תראי; רָע—B. G. רָע. 3¹⁸ עליה—M. R. עליו, decision must be arbitrary, cf. Peshitta and the Revised Version. 3²⁰ לעיניכם—R. M. לעיניהם, cf. 3¹⁸.

The printed texts from Walton to Kittel are identical except in a few pointings and matres lectionis. The sporadic readings in the collations are either due to the versions or are explainable as common corruptions in manuscript transmission. Other explanations than those given above may be equally satisfactory; but the true reading is nowhere in doubt, as each variant has the support of only a few manuscripts at most. It is evident that the archetype of the manuscripts and printed texts here represented has been transmitted with remarkable accuracy.

CHAPTER I.

THE VULGATE.

§1. The history of Jerome's translation may be divided into three epochs of unequal length, the first and second each culminating in an important recension of the text, the third continuing into the present. The first period is one of conflict between it and the Old Latin which it was meant to supersede. The new translation met with violent opposition from many quarters, and its introduction was therefore very gradual. The fact that the older version persisted and the method by which a text had to be transmitted conspired together to rob Jerome's translation of its purity in this conflict of almost four centuries. It could conquer the older version only by absorbing many of its characteristics, while every copy that was made both transmitted and increased errors. The power of the Church was being more and more concentrated and its influence so extended that it was gradually becoming the dominant force in Western Europe ; but the authority of the Bible, which was the foundation on which the whole structure of the ecclesiastical hierarchy was felt to rest, was being dissipated more and more, because hardly two copies of it were in agreement. A supreme papacy needed an official text, and it remained for Charlemagne, who was actuated mainly by liturgical motives, to establish one by means of the recension undertaken at his behest by Alcuin. Theodulf († 821) made an independent recension at about the same time. The Vulgate which was thus established doubtless differed in many important particulars from Jerome's autograph, but unfortunately very little is known of the history of the text during these centuries of conflict; and the students of Latin Bible texts are consequently unable with any degree of fulness to trace out the process by which the Carolingian Vulgate was evolved. The verses quoted by the church fathers of the period and the few incidental remarks scattered here and there through the pages of their writings throw but a feeble light into the darkness, which begins to lift only in the last century (VIII).

§ II. Toward the close of this epoch and in the next the Vulgate takes higher and higher rank. Wherever the Church goes, it goes as the official version of the Word of God, while Latin becomes everywhere the language of worship. The artificial unity of language thus established was a powerful factor in building up an ecclesiastical sovereignty that practically obliterated national boundaries. The Hildebrandian Papacy had been all but impossible without the Vulgate, which had for many centuries, first through use in missionary propaganda, and then in the liturgies and lectionaries of worship, been welding together the diverse elements of which it was composed. The torch of learning, though it burned most dimly, was borne along by the Church alone during this dark period; and the only text-book in most curricula was the Vulgate. Copies were multiplied with great rapidity in the schools and monasteries. Again, as was inevitable, the text became so corrupt that many recensions were made. These sporadic attempts could, however, bring about no permanent improvement, because manuscripts were so widely distributed that concerted effort was impossible, while the scribes' choice of exemplars to copy was controlled by the flimsiest critical principles, if by any.¹ Even the early printed editions were for the most part set up from such manuscripts as were near at hand. It remained for the Council of Trent to suggest the remedy that the discovery of printing had made possible, and the Sixtine-Clementine edition is the result of a decree passed by that body. With but few exceptions the 8000 extant manuscripts of the Vulgate belong to this period. The text to be found in them is almost uniformly corrupt.

§ III. The third period of the Vulgate's history begins with the Clementine text of 1592. It is still the official text of the Vatican. Many reprints of it have been made; but no edition, embracing the results of the latest discoveries and based on approved critical methods, has yet appeared, at least not for the Old Testament. Heyse and Tischendorf's pretentious Biblia Sacra Lat. Vet. Test. Hieronymo interprete (1873) is practically identical with Bagster's cheap reprint.² The Latin column of Funk and Wagnall's popular Hexapla Bible (1906) differs only in a few punctuations from the de luxe edition, Biblia Sacra Vulgata (Critice edidit P. M. Helzenover, 1906), in which at least one misprint has escaped the proofreader.³ Vercellone's Sacra Vulgatae Editionis Sixti V et Clementis VIII (Rome, 1861) is generally regarded as the best.⁴

⁴ Now and again more or less extensive excursions have been made into the field of the textual criticism of the Vulgate Old Testament, but on the whole it is still an unexplored domain. Berger, in the introduction to the work already mentioned, gives a very satisfactory sketch of what has been accomplished both in the Old and New Testaments. The book itself takes rank as a classic in Vulgate studies and contains a complete bibliography.

§ IV. The Vulgate manuscripts must be considered in their geographical distribution; for three main types of texts, kept more or less distinct from each other by natural boundaries, are clearly defined. Ireland and Spain because of their location both remained for the most part isolated from the rest of Europe. The Vulgate text, which was early taken to these countries, was thus kept separated from the main continental current of transmission. As the purity of a text is, generally speaking, inversely proportioned to the number of times it has been copied, the rate of corruption of manuscripts was much less rapid in Ireland and Spain than elsewhere. But Irish missionaries and Irish monks kept carrying the Irish text to different parts of the continent; and in the first year of the ninth century the Alcuin recension brought the Irish type of text back into the main stream of transmission, for he is known to have sent to York for manuscripts to be used in his work.¹ Theodulf seems to have been familiar with the manuscripts in use in the South of France, and his collations may have brought into the main current many characteristic Spanish readings. In the Clementine text these three types are blended, for manuscripts from many places were collated for it. As compared with each other, the pure Irish type is much better than the pure Spanish. The known national characteristics of the two peoples lead to the inference that Irish manuscripts would be less ornamental and more accurate, and this is confirmed by all that is known of the types.

§ V. It is clear from what has been said that a comparison of manuscripts of these three types will yield the earliest obtainable text. The Codex Amiatinus is earlier than the Alcuin recension,² and the Codex Toletanus antedates Theodulf.³ For the continental type, in lieu of anything better, the Clementine must needs be used. The results of such a comparison for Zephaniah are as follows:⁴ 1¹ Sophoniam filium Chusi.—A. Sofoniam filium Cusi

² A very interesting account of how the age of this, the best of the Irish manuscripts, was finally fixed is to be found in Studia Biblica et Ecclesiastica, Oxford, 1890, II, pp. 273 ff.

³ A description of these manuscripts may be found in Berger's Histoire de la Vulgate, etc., pp. 37 f. and pp. 12 f.

(Jerome is known to have aspirated the Begadkefat; cf. Lagarde's Onomastica, index). fili Godaliae—A. T. filium Godaliae (this is perhaps an Old Latin reading as it agrees with the Septuagint). fili Amariae filii—T. filium Amariae filium (the sense demands the genitive). Ezeciae—A. Ezechiae (ρ was not aspirated by Jerome in transliteration; cf. Lagarde's Onomastica, index). Amon—A. Ammon. Judae—T. Juda. 1³ volatilia—A. T. volatile. 1⁹ super omnem—A. omnem. omnem . . . qui ingreditur—T. omnes . . . qui ingrediuntur. 1¹¹ Pilae—T. filiae (corruption). disperierunt—T. dispergerunt (corruption). 1¹² faecibus—A. fecibus (spelled foecibus, Jer. 48¹¹; the spelling fec is allowable; cf. Harper's Latin Dictionary, p. 744). faciet—A. faciat (corruption). 1¹⁴ Juxta est—A. Juxta et (corruption). 1¹⁷ corpora—A. corpus. 1¹⁸ faciet cunctis—T. faciet Dominus cunctis (interpretative addition, suggested perhaps by 1¹³). 2² super vos ira—A. ira; antequam clause (2) omitted—T. (This may be Old Latin, cf. p. 31.) Indignationis—A. furoris (in the Liber de Divinis Scripturis sive Speculum, XVI, De Libro Sophoniae, this same variant occurs in an evident Vulgate text, and therefore the reading of A. is to be adopted). 2³ qui—T. quia (corruption). 2⁵ Philisthorum—A. Philistinorum (cf. 1¹). inhabitor—T. habitator. 2⁶ pecorum—T. ovium (this may be Old Latin). 2⁷ remanserit—A. manserit. 2⁸ quae—T. qui (corruption). 2⁹ Gomorra—A. Gomorra (cf. 1¹). in aeternum—T. in sempiternum (this may be another Old Latin reading). eos et . . . illos—A. T. illos . . . illos (the agreement of A. and T. is hard to explain unless they represent the Old Latin; the Septuagint has αὐτοὺς καὶ . . . αὐτούς, thus the agreement with it is only partial). 2¹¹ vir—A. T. vir (in a quotation, evidently made from memory, Augustine has vir with adorabit. He seems to have changed the number of the verb to turn this Hebraism into intelligible Latin, whereas the Clementine text has changed the number of the noun). 2¹² et vos Aethiopes—T. et vos et Aethiopes (dittography). 2¹³ Speciosam—A. T. Speciosa (Jerome's translation of Nineveh is hardly intelligible in Latin, and the unusual fem. sing. adj. was early corrupted into the ordinary neut. plu.). 2¹⁴ quoniam—T. quum. 2¹⁵ civitas gloriosa—A. gloriosa civitas (accidental inversion). 3² confisa—T. confixa (corruption). appropinquavit—A. adpropiauit (corruption). 3^s mane mane—A. T. mane (homoioteleutonic omission; or perhaps better, the Hebraism was early removed). lucem—A. luce (corruption). 3^o disperdidi—A. disperdi, T. disperdit (corruptions). neque ullo—A. nec ullo. 3⁷ dixi attamen—A. dixit tamen (corruption). suscipies—T. suscipe (as timebis was read, suscipe must be a corruption). 3^s et effundam—A. T. ut effundam (the reading ut may be accepted, not only because it is supported by these two ancient manuscripts, but because it brings out the meaning of the Hebrew better; per se a corruption is possible either way; the Old Latin has et). indignationem—T. omnem indignationem (dittography due to following omnem). 3⁹ invocent—A. T. vocent. 3¹³ mendacium et non—T. mendacium non (accidental omission). 3¹⁴ Jubila—A. Jubilate (interpretative with Israel in distributive sense). 3¹⁷ salvabit—T. salvabit te (perhaps due to Old Latin influence; cf. Septuagint). exsultabit—T. et exsultabit (cf. Septuagint; more likely, however, an ordinary sporadic reading). 3¹⁹ eam quae ejecta fuerat—T. ea quae electa fuerant (corruption). 3²⁰ tempore quo congregabo—T. tempore congregabo (monography).

§ VI. Since the distance of the text now established from the autograph must still be measured in centuries, many Old Latin elements that crept in after Jerome had finished his work may be contained in it. The Spanish text as a whole is known to betray an especially strong Old Latin influence, and perhaps the synonyms of T. in 2^{7, 8}, as well as other readings peculiar to this manuscript (3¹⁷), come from this source. The Old Latin of Zephaniah has not survived,¹ and consequently it cannot be directly determined how much of it, if anything, has passed into the Vulgate either originally through Jerome himself, who sometimes consciously, and perhaps more often unconsciously, incorporated its readings, or through subsequent confusions due to their transmission side by side. In the belief that they would be of interest, and, perhaps, even of importance in this connection, a collection of quotations from the early Latin Fathers was made.² It was rather disappointing to find that only a few of the Latin ecclesiastical writers before the middle of the fifth century were cited in the critical editions of their works as having referred to Zephaniah. In Tertullian only an allusion to the dies irae was to be found. A single clause occurs in Nolanus:

1^{11b} Exterminati sunt omnes qui exultati fuerant auro et argento.

Vulgate: disperierunt omnes involuti argento. This can be regarded only as an expansive allusion to Zephaniah. Cassian quotes a clause, the thought of which is of such a nature that divergence in its expression is practically impossible except in particles:

1^{12b} Qui dicunt in cordibus suis, non faciet Dominus bene, sed neque faciet male.

Vulgate: Qui dicunt in cordibus suis: non faciet bene dominus, et non faciet male.

More than a third of the book can be recovered from Cyprian, Augustine and Tyconius.¹ For the purposes of comparison that which seems to be genuine Old Latin has been here placed between the Vulgate and the Septuagint.

Augustine (1). Praevalebit dominus adversus eos et exterminabit omnes deos gentium terrae, et adorabunt eum unus quisque de loco suo, omnes insulae gentium.

Augustine (2). Horribilis Dominus super eos, et exterminabit omnes deos terrae, et adorabil eum vir de loco suo, omnes insulae gentium.

Vulgate. Horribilis Dominus super eos, et attenuabit omnes deos terrae; et adorabunt eum vir de loco suo, omnes insulae Gentium.

Dominus autem justus in medio ejus, non faciet injustum.¹

In these verses positive proof of Jerome's use of the Old Latin is not to be found. There are a few agreements, but these may well be accidental.¹ The remarkable differences, even in places where greater similarity would hardly have been surprising because of the nature of the ideas to be expressed, seem to preclude literary dependence on Jerome's part; for this could be established only by more striking agreements in more characteristic passages. The so-called Itala Question does not present itself in connection with these quotations. In only one case (31-2) are the same verses recovered from two sources. In one of these it is in an interpretation and not in a quotation, and this may well account for the slight differences found. It may now be stated positively that the text already established must be considered as the purest text of the Vulgate of Zephaniah that can be obtained.

§ VII. No more emphatic proof of the high esteem in which the Vulgate is still held could be offered than the fact that modern Catholic scholarship is about to engage in the stupendous task of a new revision which will, when completed, be the crowning tribute of Latin Christianity to St. Jerome.¹ Doubtless the choiceness of its diction and the majesty of its style have been largely instrumental in raising this version to the commanding position which it has so long occupied in the Catholic Church; but it could not continue to usurp the place of the inspired Hebrew Old Testament so entirely, if its general faithfulness as a translation were not beyond dispute. In Textual Criticism, however, accuracy in detail is the measure of a version's value; and entire consistency in translation, even to the complete subordination of all matters of style and diction, is the translator's chief virtue. The Latin text of Zephaniah reveals frequent conflict between the careful translator and the literary artist. Occasionally Jerome's faithfulness to the Hebrew leads him to do violence to the Latin idiom (1^a congregans congregabo; 2¹¹ adorabunt eum vir de loco suo). More frequently he is satisfied with an ad sensum rendering from which the reading of his exemplar could never be recovered without the help of the Massoretic Text (2^{7a} qui remanserit de domo Juda=שארית בית יהודה; ibi=עליהם; 3⁴ injuste egerunt contra=חמסו; 3⁶ dum non est qui transeat=מבלי איש מאין; non remanente viro, neque ullo habitatore=מבלי איש מן; 3⁷ omnia, in quibus visitavi eam=כל אשר פקרתי עליה; 3¹⁷ fortis, ipse salvabit=גבור ישע). His translations of participles prove him a firm believer in the principle of varietas delectat (participle=participle 1⁴; participle with article=participle 1¹²; participle with article=relative clause 1¹²; participle=relative clause 3⁶; participle=adjective 3³; participle=noun 1¹⁸; participle=finite independent verb 1¹⁴; cf. further 2¹⁴, where finite independent verb=participle, and 1⁴, 1¹¹, 2^{5,6}, 3⁶, where ישב is in each case differently rendered). Connectives he supplies or omits quite arbitrarily (1¹¹, 1¹⁸, 2¹, 3^{8,9}, 3⁹), and occasionally he inserts the copula (1³, 2¹⁰, 2¹⁵ eveniet). Prepositions are for the sake of variety or interpretatively supplied, omitted or changed (2^2 , 2^9 , 3^3 , 3^7 , 3^{10} ; in $1^{3,4}$ he seems to distinguish between מעל and מן, the former being rendered by ab, the latter by de). He sometimes shows a very accurate knowledge of Hebrew syntax (1^8 et erit visitabo = ופקרת־ והיה, the Septuagint has καὶ ἔσται καὶ ἐδακῆσω; 3^7 diluculo surgentes corruperunt = השכימו השחיתו). In matters of vocabulary he is, however, not a safe guide. רמה destroy and נאל pollute were unknown to him. Speciosam in 2^{13} is due rather to his failure to understand the passage than to his fondness for translating proper names (cf. 1^{11} , Pilae); at any rate his etymology of Nineveh, if he read the word, is far-fetched.¹ The richness of his Latin vocabulary is of course largely responsible for his lack of consistency in the choice of words. For almost every Hebrew word to be translated there were many Latin equivalents and near-equivalents at his command. לון is rendered in the Vulgate Old Testament by morari (2^{14}), commorari, demorari, manere, remanere, permanere, quiescere, requiescere, habitare, esse, residere, ingere tentoria, dormire (cf. further Ψ 49¹³, 59¹⁶, Job 27⁷, II Sam. 12¹⁶ for less accurate or mistaken renderings). נכרף = porrigere, parare, concupiscere, desiderium esse, amabilis (2^1). Within Zephaniah the same root is sometimes translated by different words (2^{15} , 3^{11} , 3^{11} ; 3^7 , 3^{11}). In $1^{3,4}$ הכרית־ is rendered by disperdam; and נכרת in 1^{11} is very properly rendered by disperire, which is the regular passive of disperdere;² in 2^5 , however, disperdere is the translation of האכיר, which in 2^{13} is rendered by perdere, and in 2^7 נכרת is translated by perire. Pertinent illustrations might be multiplied almost indefinitely, but enough have been given to indicate Jerome's general habit of translation and to show how wide are the limits within which the equation, Vulgate equals Massoretic Text, may with entire safety be allowed to obtain. The readings that demand more special consideration will be noted later. For the rest of the text it can be shown on the basis of the above analysis either that the present Hebrew and the Vulgate agree, or that proof of their disagreement is impossible.

CHAPTER II.

THE PESHITTA.

§ I. There is no apparatus criticus for the study of the Peshitta text of Zephaniah, and with the exception of Ceriani's photolithographic reproduction of the Cod. Ambrosianus no manuscripts are available. As far as can be gathered from the scattered and incidental notices of various writers, there are only a few old Syriac manuscripts containing this book in the libraries of Europe. That there are none in Berlin rests on the authority of Strack. In England those earlier than the seventeenth century are British Museum Add. 14,432, 14,443 and 14,468 (1^{1-a}); Cambridge L. e. 2.4, Uni. Add. 1965, Buchanan Bible. In lieu of manuscripts the printed editions, of which there are five, must be used to establish a critical apparatus for the text. Of these the Syriac text of the Paris Polyglot is the earliest (1645). This was reproduced in Walton's London Polyglot (1657), and again, but without vowels, by Lee for the British Bible Society (1821). A Syriac Bible was printed in Nestorian characters and with Nestorian vowels by American missionaries in Urmiah (1852). More recently the Dominicans of Mosul have printed a text (1887-1892). It is difficult to determine the critical value of these editions. P. (=Paris Polyglot), W. (=Walton's Polyglot) and L. (=Lee's text), are generally allowed to count as only one witness, because their differences are either misprints or improvements in spelling. That L. was used for U. (=Urmiah) can be deduced from the text itself.¹ It has not as yet been made certain whether M. (=Mosul) has independent value or not, because those competent to judge seem to have been unable to obtain copies.² The text of P. is known to have been taken from the manuscript Syriaque 6 of the Bibliothèque Nationale, which dates from the seventeenth century. As a manuscript it has no special merit, and it seems to have been used only because it was convenient for the printers to handle. The sixth tome of Walton's Polyglot (pp. 19 ff.) contains a collation of two manuscripts, Usher and Pocock. In the Prolegomena to this work (p. 165²) it is stated that Us. (=Usher) was copied "from a codex of the Patriarch of Antioch," who is the head of the Maronites. In all likelihood this was an old codex not on sale. According to Barnes (Journal of Theological Studies, II, p. 186), Lee had access to the Buchanan Bible and to Cambridge L. e. 2.4, and it may therefore be assumed that he did not find in them any readings which seemed to warrant a departure from the London Polyglot. These as well as Cod. Ambrosianus are Jacobite manuscripts. If manuscripts were used for U. and M., they were undoubtedly of Nestorian and Jacobite or Maronite character respectively.¹ These few facts and probabilities, in which practically all that is known about the origin of these texts is comprised, can in themselves hardly support any positive conclusions; but in the light of the history of Syrian Christianity they are of paramount importance for the textual criticism of the Peshitta.

§ II. The Peshitta version owes its survival largely to the Christological heresies of the fifth century. After the Council of Ephesus (431) the followers of Nestorius were so bitterly persecuted by their Monophysitic opponents that the heresy taught by him was speedily stamped out in Italy and Greece. The Oriental Nestorians, over whom the ecclesiastical control of Rome and Constantinople was but feeble because they were separated both by language and character from the Christians of Europe, maintained their peculiar tenets despite all opposition, and Syria became virtually a theological battle-ground. The Monophysites were victorious because of the powerful advocacy of Anastasius and Zeno, and they succeeded in driving the Nestorians more deeply into the territory of the Sassanian kings of Persia. Since the Gospel was first preached within their kingdom, these kings had watched with suspicion the "aliens who had embraced the religion, and who might favor the cause, of the hereditary foes of their realm;"² but now that they were rebels against the Roman Empire and fugitives from Roman jurisdiction, they were eagerly welcomed, and in the year 483 or 484¹ at the Synod of Bêth Lâpât Nestorianism was officially adopted as its confession of faith by the Christian Church in Persia. The Monophysites were themselves anathematized by the Council of Chalcedon (451), and the same influence of language and character operated to perpetuate this heresy in Syria. They were in turn harassed by the Nestorians, for whom apparent defeat had become a triumph through the powerful allies gained, and their ecclesiastical organization was accomplished only with the greatest difficulty by Jacob Baradaeus, from whom they obtained the name of Jacobites. The odium theologicum thus kindled between Nestorians and Jacobites has never ceased to burn. Toward the close of the following century many of the Syrian Christians who had escaped both Nestorianism and Monophysitism and who were called Melkites because of their loyalty to the Empire, were wrecked on the rock of Monothelitism; and a third sect resulted whose members are called Maronites. They never became entirely free from Roman influence and were finally brought back into the Church, when certain minor concessions of ritual and clerical privilege were made by the Papacy.

§ III. The Peshitta remained the official version of Scripture for these three sects; and though Arabic or Persian became their vernacular after the Mohammedan conquest, the Bible continued to be read in the sacred language. Their common acceptance of the Peshitta in spite of their lasting hostility to each other amounts to proof positive that the Peshitta antedates the schisms which separated them; and the schisms, in that they would tend to produce three distinct lines of transmission, give to Textual Criticism its only means of determining an ancient text.

(A.) Where all the authorities agree, it may be safely affirmed that the text is older than the last quarter of the fifth century.

(B.) Am. (=Ambrosianus) and Us. together establish the West-Syrian reading, for one is Jacobite and the other Maronite.

(C.) If U. contains any distinctly Nestorian readings, they ought to be easily recognized because they stand alone.

(D.) In the absence of more positive criteria U. may be allowed to decide between West-Syrian readings. These vaguely general and by no means absolute rules,¹ aided here and there by the scholia of Bar Hebraeus and the quotations of other writers, must in the absence of anything better fix this important text for the entire fifteen centuries or more of its existence. Though Assemani, himself a Syrian, has written a tome of 950 pages concerning Syrian Christianity,² he throws little light on the history of the Peshitta as such; and little more is now known of its origin³ than Theodore of Mopsuestia seems to have known when he wrote :

ἡρμῆνεται δὲ ταῦτα εἰς μὲν τὴν τῶν Σύρων παρ' ὅτου δήποτε, οὐδὲ γὰρ ἔγνωσται μέχρι τῆς τήμερον ὅστις ποτὲ οὗτος ἐστίν.⁴

The readings to be preferred according to the rules formulated above have been starred. With one exception the variants are of no importance, consisting either in omissions and additions of o, ?, and ?, or in differences of spelling. In 3¹⁹⁻²⁰ the collation gives a reading which commends itself as original. The text obtained from these different lines of transmission contains inner-Syriac corruptions, and these must therefore be very early. In 1⁹ Po.

has corrected one of these by reading ܥܕܪܡܫܝܥ for ܥܕܪܡܫܝܥ. The others are ܡܡܢܐ for ܡܡܢܐ (2¹¹); ܡܡܢܐ (pointed ܡܡܢܐ in W.) for ܡܡܢܐ (2¹⁴, cf. Brockelmann's Lexicon Syriacum, p. 258^b, and Ez. 17^{3,23}); ܡܡܢܐ for ܡܡܢܐ (3⁹, cf. 1¹⁶).

§ V. Bar Hebraeus cites Zephaniah in the following verses, quoting at most a clause though generally only a word:¹ 1¹, 1², 1^{3,3,3}, 1⁸, 1^{10,10}, 1^{11,11}, 1¹⁷, 2^{7,7}, 2¹², 2¹³, 2^{14,14}, 2¹⁵, 3⁴, 3⁵, 3⁹, 3¹⁵. In 1¹¹ one of the three codices collated by Moritz agrees with Am. in omitting the final ܥ of ܡܡܢܐ. In 2⁷, where the editions all have ܡܡܢܐ, Bar Hebraeus seems to have read ܡܡܢܐ (in ripa maris). This may be an explanation of the geographical location of Askalon; some connection with the ܡܡܢܐ of 2^{5,6,7} is not unlikely. The remainder of his citations agree with the text of the editions. The scholia have no textual value, being either on the vocalization of words or of an interpretative character. Quotations of Zephaniah must be exceedingly rare in early Syriac religious literature, because a patient search of many indices and footnotes yielded only a few allusions to Zephaniah by Ephraem Syrus in his poetical Homilies, and two partial quotations of the same verse (3⁹) by Aphraates, in which he does not differ from the accepted text.²

§ VI. The translation of Zephaniah, while literal, is not slavish, and its style is smooth and flowing. The similarity of Hebrew and Syriac in idiom and vocabulary was evidently of great help to the translator; but still the Peshitta, as the Vulgate, falls far short of that accuracy of detail and consistency in translation which gives a version its chief value for Textual Criticism. The data which show the general character of the translation, and which thus, though of little or no importance per se, indicate where possible variants may be looked for and where not, may be at once collected and dismissed from further consideration.³

It is evident from this collection of "peculiarities" that the motive of the Peshitta translator was religious rather than scholarly, and that he desired to make a readable rather than an exact translation. He much preferred expansion to condensation. Interpretative additions, especially in places where the style of the Hebrew is concise or elliptical, are not infrequent (2¹⁵, 3¹, 3⁷, 3⁸). There is a marked preference for long sentences, and these are formed by adding connective particles (passim). Pronouns are both supplied and omitted (2¹², 3¹¹). Interpretations and paraphrases are occasionally found (1⁴, 1⁹, 1¹⁰). There is at least one change for theological reasons (2¹¹). A word denoting a general conception is sometimes substituted for one that denotes a particular part of the conception (2¹⁴). A plural is often used to render a collective (1³, 2¹⁴). Minor changes of order, the reason for which is not clear, also occur (1¹⁸, 3⁹). Gross ignorance of Hebrew syntax and vocabulary cannot be laid to his charge (cf., however, 1¹¹, 3¹). Ryssel's general estimate of the Peshitta of Micah¹ will serve equally well for that of Zephaniah. His words are:—Fassen wir . . . unser Urtheil über den Syrer zusammen, so muss die grosse formelle Gewandtheit anerkannt werden, mit welcher er die Gedanken des hebr. Textes ins Syrische überzutragen versteht, und der leichte, flüssige Stil, in dem alle Unebenheiten des Ausdrucks beseitigt sind; dabei schreibt er korrekt und vermeidet deshalb meist Hebraismen.

CHAPTER III.

THE SEPTUAGINT.

§ I. For many centuries after its origin the Septuagint was a potent religious force, first among Hellenized Jews and later more especially among Christians. Its importance is shown by the translations of Aquila, Symmachus and Theodotian indirectly,² and directly by Origen's Hexapla and the recensions of Hesychius and Lucian. Through the gradual ascendancy of Rome, its place was, however, more and more usurped by the Vulgate, and its direct religious influence continued only in the many secondary versions that were based on it.¹ During this time through the mixture and conflation of recensions and translations—a process which was much facilitated by the lazy and ignorant use of Origen's Hexaplaric Septuagint—the text of the manuscripts became exceedingly corrupt. Humanism in its passionate love for the literature of Occidental antiquity, and the Protestant Reformation in that it rejected the authority of the Vulgate while its formal principle demanded an authoritative Scripture, combined to revive a critical interest in the Septuagint which has been steadily growing; but it has long ceased to undergo recension for religious motives, and the printing-press has checked all further corruption by eclectic manuscript transmission. The history of the Septuagint thus falls into two general epochs, which may be called the Epoch of Construction and the Epoch of Reconstruction. Between these lies the period of manuscript transmission in which the second epoch must find its material with which to work. Many editions of the Septuagint have appeared, but the process of reconstruction is still far from complete.² The great problem is to recover the pre-Hexaplaric (pre-Origenic) text; but this can be obtained only after the Hexaplaric, Hesychian and Lucianic texts, which lie confused together in the manuscripts, have been separated from each other. The three types thus obtained would, after the recensional elements of each had been removed, represent the texts current in Palestine, Egypt and Syria in the early and late third century, and their collation would yield a very early Greek text. Along these lines comparatively little has as yet been done.³ The extant Hexaplaric fragments have been collected by Field in his Hexapla Origenis, but the text is not restored in a connected form. Lagarde began the reconstruction of a provisional Lucianic text, but only one volume of his work appeared before his death.¹ The Hesychian recension has not yet been so much as definitely identified.² The collations of H. P. (= Vetus Testamentum Graecum, cum variis Lectionibus, ed. Robertus Holmes [. . . editionem a Roberto Holmes inchoatam continuavit Jacobus Parsons], Oxford, 1798–1827), and S. (= Cambridge Manual Septuagint, The Old Testament in Greek according to the Septuagint, H. B. Swete, 1887–1894, 1895–1899) contain practically all the evidence of manuscripts and editions; but the former has been severely criticised on the score both of accuracy and arrangement,³ while the latter contains the variations of only the important uncials.

² As many as sixty-three editions and reprints between the Complutensian text and that of the larger Cambridge Septuagint (now in preparation) are enumerated by Nestle and Swete. The editions from which the reprints have been made are the Complutensian (4), the Aldine (6), the Sixtine (45) and the Alexandrian [Grabian] (5). The Cambridge Manual Septuagint completes a total of sixty-five. There are also several facsimile and photolithographic editions of manuscripts, but these are not generally accessible. Many editions of single books or groups of books have appeared; the text of Zephaniah seems never to have been separately published.

§ II. The pre-Hexaplaric text of Zephaniah cannot thus be directly and positively established; indirectly something may, however, be done. In the apparatus criticus resulting from the combination of H. P. and S. there are numerous itacistic and sporadic readings which are easily recognized as such. Many rival readings, having good manuscript support, in regard to which nothing positive can be determined because of their nature, are also to be found; but since Cod. B. (= Vaticanus) on the whole presents the version in its oldest form, the balance of probability is in its favor in these cases. There are, however, several pronounced variations from B. and its supporters—B. of course represents all manuscripts not cited as differing from it, at least in so far as the collations are dependable,—which are of such a character that either they or the readings of B. from which they differ must be due to the recensions; and for the attribution of at least some of these more or less positive criteria are available. The critical notes in the margin and text of the Syro-Hexapla in some cases indicate a choice, and in others a reading is shown to be due to Lucian by the known characteristics of his work. The fragments of Origen's Hexapla (fifth column) collected by Field, the Syro-Hexaplaric version and the Old Latin fragments can also here and there be used as a test. The text of B., thus confirmed or corrected as the case may be by the available evidence, may be accepted as original. Although many elements of uncertainty must remain in a text thus established, these will be in matters of detail which are of importance mainly for the editor of a critical edition, and which do not materially affect the use of the version for Old Testament Textual Criticism.

² To what extent the Hesychian recension is still accessible in manuscripts and versions of the Septuagint is uncertain—Swete. Field made no mention of it in the Introduction to his Hexapla, although he discussed Lucian and his work extensively. Ceriani made the claim that the Codex Marchalianus (Q., XII) of the Prophets agrees very closely with the text presupposed in the Egyptian versions and in the works of Cyril of Alexandria, and that it is supported by 26, 109, 198 and 306. According to Tischendorf this codex belongs to the recension of Eusebius and Pamphilus, i. e., it is Hexaplaric. The Hesychian group in Ezekiel according to Cornill is 49, 68, 87, 90, 91, 228, 238. Lagarde and Cornill thought that this recension was to be sought in the Aldina edition, which generally follows 68 even in its mistakes; but Stekhoven claimed that the Complutensian text in the Minor Prophets agrees with 40, a manuscript which is closely related to the text used by Cyril of Alexandria and therefore to Hesychius. Grabe found the recension in Codex B. For the remaining books of the Old Testament (i. e., with the exception of the Prophets) we have as yet no published list of manuscripts containing a probable Hesychian text—Swete.

§ IV. Approximately 500 different readings are noted in H. P. and S. (a) To this total \aleph^* has contributed a large number. He seems to have been a very poor copyist, as the following specimens of his work will show:—1³ ηχθνες (ιχθύες), 1⁴ χιρα (χειρα), 1¹⁵ τὰς πόλεις, 2¹⁰ παντοκράτοραν, 3³ ἱπελίφθησαν. (b) Evident corruptions of all kinds abound:—1¹² ἀγαθοποιήσει (ἀγαθοποιήση), 1¹⁴ ταχίνη and ταχύνη (ταχεῖα), 2⁴ διεσπασμένη and διεσπαρμένη (διηρπασμένη), 2⁵ κριτῶν (κρητῶν), 2⁷ καταλύποις (καταλοίποις), 3⁶ ἐξέλειπον (ἐξέλιπον), 3⁶ κατέσπα (κατέσπασα). (c) The sporadic readings of single or of related manuscripts are numerous:—spelling, Ἰούδαν (Ἰούδα); mood, 1⁷ εὐλαβεῖσθαι (εὐλαβεῖσθε); tense, 1³ ἐκλιπέτω (ἐκλιπέτω); number, 3⁵ αὐτῶν (αὐτῆς), 1³ ἐκλιπέτωσαν (ἐκλιπέτω); person 2¹ ἡμᾶς (ὑμᾶς), 3⁶ ἐξερήμωσαν (ἐξερημώσω); case, 1⁵ δόμασι (δόματα); preposition, 1¹⁰ ἀπό (ἐπί), 1¹⁰ ἐκκεντούντων (ἀποκεντούντων), 2² ἐλθεῖν (ἐπελθεῖν); synonyms, 1¹⁶ ἰσχυράς (ὀχυράς), ἀδικίας and ἀνομίας (ἀσεβείας); words of similar appearance, 3¹² πολύν (πράν), 3⁶ ὤφθησαν (ἠφανίσθησαν), 3¹¹ προσχῆς (προσθης); additions, 1⁴ ἐν (before Jerusalem), 3² σοῦ; omissions, 1¹ ὅς: homoioteleutonic, 2⁹ μένη to μένη; dittography, 1⁴ ἐπὶ Ἰούδαν καὶ ἐπὶ Ἰούδαν (ἐπὶ Ἰούδα καί).

§ V. Between a large number of rival readings which both have good manuscript support, decision must, as has already been suggested, be arbitrary. 1⁴ ἱερῶν—ιερέων. 1⁷ ἠτοίμακε—ἠτοίμασε. 1¹⁰ ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἐκείνῃ—ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ. 1¹¹ θρηνησατε—θρηνεῖτε. 1¹³ οὐ μὴ κατοικήσουσιν—οὐ μὴ κατοικήσωσιν. 1¹⁴ ἡ ἡμέρα—ἡμέρα. 1¹⁸ ζήλου—ζήλους. 2⁴ Ἀσκάλων—Ἀσκάλων ἔσται. 2⁹ θημωνία—θιμωνία.

2¹¹ ἐπιφανήσεται—ἐπιφανής ἔσται (cf. Joel 2^{11, 31}, Hab. 1⁷). 3² οὐκ—οὐδέ. 3⁴ οἱ ἱερεῖς—ἱερεῖς. 3⁶ διοδεύεσθαι—διοδεύειν. 3⁶ διά—παρά. It is with equivalents of which these are representative that the elusive Hesychian recension may sometime be connected, unless indeed the view that it was a new version now lost ultimately prevail.¹ Comparatively few variants remain, after B's readings have been accepted in all the cases that belong to this class.

§ VI. Lucian had a double purpose in revising the Septuagint text. He wished to improve its Greek and at the same time make it conform more nearly to the original. His reverence for the Septuagint sometimes led him to place two translations side by side. In supplying lacunae he made use of the translations of Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotian. His text also has interpolations that serve only to indicate the nexus of the thought or to make an obscure passage clearer. He seems to have allowed himself to introduce only minor changes for the sake of better Greek. An occasional removal of stiffness by a slight change of construction, and the substitution of a singular for a plural predicate with a neuter subject, of a more familiar word or form for one less familiar, of one compound verb for another, and of a simple for a compound verb or vice versa, as far as now known, mark the extent of his literary revision. It is evident that there are no absolute criteria for detecting his merely literary changes, and therefore many variants of which one or the other is perhaps due to him belong to the class of which illustrations have already been given. (§ V.) Corrections according to the Hebrew and interpretative additions may, however, be identified with more or less certainty. According to Stekhoven the following readings are Lucianic:—1² πάντα additional; 1³ τὰ σκάνδαλα σὺν τοῖς ἀσεβέσιν; 1⁴ τῶν βαάλειμ, μετὰ τῶν ἱερέων additional; 1⁵ κατὰ τοῦ Μέλχομ; 1¹² τοὺς λέγοντας; 1¹⁷ ἐκχέω; 2² ἡμέρας additional; 2³ ζητήσατε δικαιοσύνην ζητήσατε πρότῃτα καὶ ἀποκρίνεσθε αὐτά; 2¹³ νεμήσεται; 2¹⁵ ἐγένετο; 3² λελυτρωμένη; 3¹⁴ εὐτέρπον; 3²⁰ οὐ additional. To these may be added: 1¹ ἐγένετο; 1¹⁸ δύνηται; 2¹³ ἔκτενω, μου, ἀπολω, θήσω; 3⁴ εἰς τὸν νόμον; 3⁷ εἶπον, διέφθαρται; 3¹³ οὐ μή. There are also two readings from the other Greek versions which may have been introduced by Lucian: 1¹⁸ τάλαιπωρίας, Aquila; 3⁸ ἐγερωσέως μου αἰωνίας, Symmachus. These readings, none of which are to be found in B., must all be rejected as recensional; they give no indication as to the nature of Lucian's Hebrew text.

§ VII. (a). In its text and margin the Syro-Hexapla has a few important critical notes:—1⁴ * μετὰ τῶν ἱερέων. 1⁵ * καὶ τοὺς προσκυνοῦντας (margin); 2² * ἡμέρα (note; hoc ex reliquiis), * πρὸ τοῦ ἐπελθεῖν ἐφ' ὑμᾶς ἡμέραν θυμοῦ Κυρίου; 2⁷ ÷ τῆς θαλάσσης, ÷ *Ἰούδα*¹; 3⁵ * εἰς φῶς καὶ οὐκ ἀπεκρύβη καὶ οὐκ ἔγνω ἀδικίαν ἐν ἀπαιτήσει (margin); 3⁶ ÷ κατέσπασα ὑπερηφάνους ἠφανίσθησαν; 3¹⁰ * προσδέξομαι ἐν διεσπαρμένοις με (margin); 3¹⁴ θύγατερ; ÷ λέγει Κύριος. (b) From the text of the Syro-Hexapla additional data may be gathered:—1⁷ καὶ omitted before ἡγίακε; 1⁹ ἐπὶ πάντας additional, Θεοῦ omitted; 1¹¹ καὶ before ἐξωλοθρεύθησαν omitted; 1¹⁵ the order of words is σκοτούς καὶ γνώφου; 2² θυμοῦ additional; 2¹⁴ καὶ before κόρακες omitted; 3⁶ the order is κρίμα αὐτοῦ δώσει, νίκος for νείκος; 3⁸ τὴν ὄργην μου πᾶσαν ὄργην θυμοῦ μου was read; ὑπολεύσομαι for ὑπολήσομαι. (c) Field's fragments of the fifth column of the Hexapla, in so far as they were not derived from the Syro-Hexapla, were obtained from Codd. 86 and Q, and from the commentaries of Jerome, Theodore of Mopsuestia and Cyril of Alexandria on the Minor Prophets. Some have thus already been cited; the rest are here added. 1³ καὶ ἀσθενήσουσιν οἱ ἀσεβεῖς; 1⁴ καὶ τὰ ὀνόματα τῶν ἱερέων; 1⁵ κατὰ τοῦ βασιλέως; 1⁹ καὶ ἐκδικήσω ἐμφανῶς ἐπὶ τὰ πρόπυλα; 1¹⁰ ἀπὸ πύλης ἀποκεντούντων; 1¹¹ οἱ κατοικοῦντες τὴν κατακεκομμένην; 1¹² ἐξερευνήσω; 1¹⁵ θλίψεως, ἀωρίας καὶ ἀφανισμοῦ; 1¹⁸ συντέλειαν καὶ σπουδὴν; 2¹ συνάχθητε καὶ συνδέθητε; 2³ κρίμα, καὶ ἀποκρίνεσθε αὐτά; 2⁴ διηρπασμένη ἔσται; 2⁵ πάροικοι κρητῶν; 2⁶ κρήτη; 2⁹ καὶ Δαμασκός, ὡς θιμωνία ἄλωνος; 2¹⁴ ὡς χαμαιλέοντες; 3¹ ὡ ἡ ἐπιφανῆς καὶ ἀπολελυτρωμένη πόλις, ἡ περιστέρα; 3³ λύκοι τῆς Ἀραβίας; 3⁵ ἐν διαφθόρᾳ, γωνία αὐτῶν; 3⁸ εἰς ἡμέραν ἀναστάσεώς μου εἰς μαρτύριον; 3⁹ ὅτι τότε μεταστρέψω ἐπὶ λαοὺς γλώσσαν εἰς γενεὰν αὐτῆς; 3¹⁰ ἐκ περάτων ποταμῶν Ἀιθιοπίας οἴσουσι θυσίας μοι; 3¹⁸ ὡς ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ἐορτῆς, οὐαί.

§ VIII. In the passages represented in these collections the text of B. is for the most part confirmed; and its readings, except such as are about to be individually considered, may be at once adopted in preference to their alternates.

1⁵ All the evidence goes to show that καὶ τοὺς προσκυνῶντας was absent from the original text of the Septuagint, and these words must be deleted from B.

1⁹ In omitting ἐπὶ πάντας B. seems to have no better support than 40 and 239. Field and the Syro-Hexaplaric text disagree. It is necessary to insert this in B. The Syro-Hexaplaric omission of Θεὸν is not explained by a note, but that this word was in the original Septuagint is attested by the Vulgate.

2² The last clause is asterisked in the Syro-Hexapla. In the preceding clause θυμὸν is added with ὀργήν (𐤇𐤃𐤍𐤇), and in the clause asterisked ὀργῆς seems to have been read for θυμὸν. There seems to have been some confusion between these clauses the initial words of which are the same. At least "aberant igitur haec a 'Septuaginta'" does not at once follow, especially as the Old Latin preserved in the Speculum omits the second of these clauses and retains the third. The same omission is suggested by a corrector of Cod. Sinaiticus (κ^{c.b}). These clauses are peculiarly liable to omission by homoioteleuton, as 233, Cod. Toletanus and several Hebrew manuscripts demonstrate. In view of this fact, and more especially because of the evident confusion, it seems unnecessary to delete either one clause or the other.

2⁷ The Syro-Hexapla misrepresents Origen in suggesting that his fifth column read ἀπὸ προσώπου νιῶν ÷ Ἰούδα ×. The obelus must be placed before the first word. These words were perhaps incorporated into the text by someone who did not understand the absolute use of καταλύειν in the sense of to lodge.

3^{5.6} According to the Syro-Hexaplaric notes and text Origen's fifth column read:

κρίμα αὐτοῦ δώσει εἰς φῶς καὶ οὐκ ἀπεκρίβη καὶ οὐκ ἔγνω (σαν) ἀδικίαν ἐν ἀπαιτήσει × καὶ οὐκ εἰς νίκος ἀδικίαν ἐν διαφθόρα ÷ κατέσπασα ὑπερηφάνους ἠφάνισθησαν ×*. The signs are again misplaced, for the last three words are certainly not a Septuagint addition. It is known that Origen sometimes gave two readings where the Septuagint differs widely from the Hebrew, and that he then indicated the Hebrew current in his time by an asterisk and the Septuagint by an obelus. Evidently someone who was ignorant θρευσε (cf. 3⁷). παιδίαν (3²) should be παιδείαν (cf. 3⁷). ἄλωνος (2⁹) must be corrected to ἄλος (Putamus ἄλος interpretatos, id est, salis; sed ab imperitis, qui θιμωνίαν, hoc est, acervum, frumenti vel frugum, putaverunt, pro ἄλος additis duābus litteris, ω et ν, quasi ad consequentiam frugum, ἄλωνος, hoc est, areae positum—Jerome).

As there seem to be no quotations of Zephaniah in the early Greek Church Fathers, the New Testament Apocrypha, the New Testament, Josephus, Philo or the Old Testament Apocrypha, no earlier text than that now established can be obtained.

§ IX. The readings of the Septuagint which illustrate the general character of the translation without proving differences of text can now be presented. From these it will be seen that the Septuagint has no general characteristics which it does not share with the Peshitta or the Vulgate, or with both.¹

1² ἐκλείψει ἐκλιπέτω—כל ארץ ארץ (Est. 9²⁸ and Ψ 73¹⁹ seem to indicate that forms of ארץ were read here; cf., however, ארם ארם (1³), where the verb was undoubtedly regarded as in the 3d person. The absence of a translation for כל makes it entirely uncertain what the Septuagintist read in his text). 1³ πετεινά—עוף (collective); ἀνόμους—ארם (this is a change for theological reasons rather than an inner-Greek corruption from ἀνθρώπους [cf. 1¹⁷, ἀνθρώπους—ארם]). It is unnecessary to suppose that the Septuagintist had either ארם רשעים [G. A. Smith] or [Grätz] ארם חטאים in his text). 1⁴ ὀνόματα—שם (collective); καί additional. 1⁵ δώματα—גות (cf. Ψ 129⁶). 1⁶ ἀπό—מאחרי; καὶ τοὺς μὴ ζητοῦντας—וְאֵשׁ לֹא בָקֶשׁוּ (the Greek and Hebrew differ in regard to the verb-form to be used with the negative); ἀντεχομένους τοῦ Κυρίου—וְרָשָׁהוּ (the participial form is again retained; for the sake of clearness the suffix is translated by its logical antecedent, cf. Jer. 8²). 1⁷ ἐυλαβείσθε—חס (cf. Zech. 2¹⁷); θυσίαν αὐτοῦ—וכח (cf. 2¹⁴, αὐτῆς). 1⁸ καὶ ἔσται καὶ ἐκδικήσω—וּפְקַדְתִּי וְהוּהוּ (the Septuagintist does not seem to have understood the Hebrew tense consecution); ἐνδύματα—מלבוש (collective). 1⁹ πρόπυλα—כַּפְתָּן (cf. 1¹²); Θεοῦ additional between ארני and its suffix (these words were thought to refer to the temple, and by this addition the reference is brought out subject of the preceding, not of the following, verb; καὶ οὐκ ἔσται ὁ ἐκφοβῶν αὐτούς—ואין כחריר (the part. in this phrase never has an object, cf. Is. 17², etc.; cf. also 2⁵, 3⁶, 1⁷, 2⁸). 3¹⁴ θύγατερ Ἰερρουσαλήμ—ישראל (perhaps the change is due to the following בְּהַר שִׁלֹּה, cf. Gen. 36³¹ B.); ἐξ ὄλης τῆς καρδίας σου—בכל לב. 3¹⁵ λελύθρωται σε ἐκ χειρὸς ἐχθρῶν σου—פנה איבך (interpretative expansion; it is unnecessary with Stekhoven to suppose that פדע was read); ἐν μέσῳ σου—בקרבתך (cf. 3^{9,17}). 3¹⁶ ἐν τῷ καιρῷ—ביום (cf. 1¹²). 3¹⁷ ἐν σοί—בקרבתך (cf. 3³, 3¹⁵); object pronoun additional (2). 3¹⁹ λέγει Κύριος additional. 3¹⁹ ὀνομαστός—שם (3²⁰ idem). 3²⁰ καὶ and ὅταν additional; ἐνώπιον ὑμῶν—לעיניכם.

CHAPTER IV.

THE INTERDEPENDENCE OF THE VERSIONS.

§ I. The Peshitta is of Post-Christian origin, and in New Testament times the Septuagint was already so well established that it was quoted as authoritative. The wide popularity that the Septuagint enjoyed would tend to cause many of its phrases, expressions and interpretations to pass into current use, and some of these may have been unconsciously adopted by the makers of the new version. As they were not entirely familiar with Hebrew, it is natural that they should consult the existing version when in doubt. The two translations continued to exist side by side as ecclesiastically recognized versions, and correction of the one by the other is therefore not impossible, especially since many Greek ecclesiastics were resident in Syria for a longer or shorter time. That the Peshitta and Syro-Hexapla may have influenced each other mutually is shown by the case of Bar-Hebraeus, who is known to have used them both. The probability of interdependence, either initial or subsequent, thus established is so strong that the Septuagint and the Peshitta cannot be regarded as independent witnesses when they agree together against the Hebrew.¹ In Zephaniah the influence of the Septua-of the readings cited the Peshitta seems to have influenced the Syriac translation from the Septuagint (cf. 2¹, 3¹).

§ II. Jerome lamented the fact that in his day the world 'was divided between three opposing texts of the Septuagint.'¹ It was his purpose in his translation to get behind the Septuagint back to the "Hebrew verity"; and though he frequently reminds his reader that his work is not condemnatory of the ancients,² he is not slow to point out wherein and how they erred. As the purpose of Origen was similar to his own, he was naturally a great admirer of the Hexápla. His use of it can readily be illustrated by a few quotations:

2⁷ Quod autem legitur in 'Septuagintam' a facie filiorum Juda, obelo prae-notavimus, nec in Hebraeo enim, nec apud ullam fertur interpretatum. 3⁹ Ubi nos interpretati sumus reddam populis labium electum, pro electo 'Septuagintes' dixerunt in generationem ejus, ut subaudiatur, terrae. Et hinc error exortus est, quod verbum Hebraicum BARURA, quod Aq. et Theo. electum, Sym. Mundum interpretatus est, 'Septuagintes' legerunt BADURA.³ 3¹⁸ Miror autem Aq. et 'Septuaginta' in eo loco ubi diximus: congregabo quia ex te erant, pro erant interpretati voluisse vae, sive αἶ, quod semper Aq. non pro plangendo, sed pro vocando et inelamando ponit.

There are only a few passages in the Vulgate which seem to indicate direct dependence on the Septuagint. Nomina and ὀνόματα (1⁴), silete and εἰλαβεῖσθε (1⁷), transeuntem and πορευόμενον (2²), et attenuabit and καὶ ἐξολοθρεύσει (2¹¹), the additions of quasi and ὡς (3³), expecta and ὑπόμεινον (3⁶), and the addition of the same suffix (3⁹) may all be accidental. Columba (3¹) may not be due to the Septuagint περιστερὰ, for in Jer. 25³⁸ Jerome makes the same mistake. Corvus (2¹⁴) is, however, an intentional agreement with the Septuagint against the Hebrew of his day (Quod nos et 'Septuaginta' similiter transtulimus corvus in Hebraeo ponitur HAREB. The Vulgate and the Septuagint agree further in the peculiar addition of אלהי between ארני and its suffix (1°); in the interpretation of נכסף (2°), גרמו (2°) and נגאלה (3°); and in the subordination of the independent clause of 3²⁰. All these agreements can hardly be accidental, especially since it is known that Jerome was thoroughly familiar with the Septuagint.

CHAPTER V.

THE DEPARTURES OF THE VERSIONS FROM THE MASSORETIC TRADITION AND THEIR POSITIVE VARIANTS FROM THE CONSONANTAL TEXT.

§ I. Vowels and accents were introduced into the Hebrew text not earlier than the sixth century A. D. The so-called Sopherim in the first Christian centuries fixed the form of writing as regards the matres lectionis. There is good reason to believe that there was neither word or sentence division in the earliest manuscripts. It is therefore possible to consider the consonantal text entirely apart from the form which tradition has given it by the word and verse division that now obtains, and from the interpretation that the vocalization gives it; for these are as it were superimposed upon the original text. The translators in some cases adopted a possible reading or interpretation which disagrees with the Massoretic tradition.¹

(a). 1° Congregans (2)—אָקַף (* אָקַף, cf. 1°). 1° Melchom—מֶלְכָם (* מֶלְכָם is read in the Massoretic text only in I Kgs. 11⁵⁻³³ and II Kgs. 23¹³; it has been proposed to read it also in I Kgs. 11⁷, II Sam. 12³⁰, I Chr. 20², Am. 1¹⁵ and Jer. 49¹⁻³. Jehovah is often called a king [cf. 3¹⁶; Harper, Amos and Hosea, p. 141; and Brown, Driver and Briggs' Hebrew Lexicon, Art. מֶלֶךְ, 3]. The name Milchom occurs or is proposed as a reading only in passages in which Ammon is mentioned in the immediate context. In this passage there is no reference to Ammon, and therefore it is necessary to accept the Massoretic punctuation and to look for the exact meaning of the words in the use of different prepositions with the same verb). 1¹¹ conticuit—נרמה (*נרמה). 1¹⁴ The Vulgate takes מר as a predicate adjective with יום. 2^o perditorum—כרתים (*כרתים, cf. I Kgs. 7¹²—Pro CHORETIM, quod dicitur, perditorum, nomen Cretae Insulae ('Septuagintes') putaverunt—Jerome). 2¹⁴ attenuabo—ארוה (*ארוה, cf. 2¹¹). 3^o in futurum—לער († Ubi nos transtulimus, in die resurrectionis meae in futurum, et omnes interpretati sunt, in testimonium, Hebraeus, qui me in Scripturis instituit, asserebat LAED in praesenti loco magis eis ζῆτι, id est, in futurum debere intelligi—Jerome; cf. Is. 30⁸, Am. 1¹¹, Is. 9⁸ and Gen. 49²⁷ in the Vulgate). 3¹⁸ Nugas—גיגי (nugas* . . . a nobis ita ut in Hebraeo erat positum, ut nosse possimus linguam Hebraicam omnium linguarum esse matricem. This has been characterized as an interesting bit of crude comparative linguistics. Amara = מר (1¹⁴) would have served Jerome's purpose much better. The Septuagint offers a parallel in χάος = גי, (Mic. 1⁴). 3¹⁸ ut non ultra habeas—משאח על (*משאח על, cf. Lev. 19⁷). 3²⁰ in tempore quo congregabo—קעת קבצי (קעת). See further under (c) 2², 3¹¹, 3²⁰.

(b) 1⁸ מלכם—מלכם (cf. Vulgate, supra). 1¹¹ נרמה—נרמה (*נרמה). 2¹⁴ חרב—חרב (חרב). 3¹¹ ut non ultra habeas is connected with what precedes and not with what follows. See further under (c) 1¹¹, 2², 3¹, 3⁸, 3¹⁹.

(c) 1¹ τὸν τοῦ χουσί—בן כושי (the Septuagintist has interpreted בן כושי patronymically as the following νίόν seems to show). 1¹¹ τὴν κατακεκομμένην—המכתש (*המכתש); ὠμωίθη—נרמה (there are two similar roots of which one means *to be like; the other, to destroy). 1¹² φυλάγματα (cf. Peshitta) αὐτῶν—שמריהם (*שמריהם, cf. Ex. 12¹²). 1¹⁴ τέτακται—שם (*שם); גבור was read as an adjective with the following יום and not as a noun. 1¹⁷ καὶ ἐκχεῖ—ושפך (*ושפך). 2^o πορευόμενον (cf. Peshitta and Vulgate)—עבר († עבר). 2³ ἀποκρίσθε αὐτά—ענהו (*ענהו). 2¹⁴ διορύγμασιν—חלן (this meaning of the word is to be found nowhere else in the Septuagint). 3¹ ἀπολευτρωμένη (cf. Vulgate and Peshitta)—נאלה (there are two roots נאל, of which one means *to redeem; the other, to pollute); ἡ περιστέρα (cf. Vulgate).—היונה (this form may be a * noun subject of שמעה, 3²; or a participle from ינה, to oppress). 3³ Ἀραβίας—עַרַב (* עַרַב, cf. Jer. 25²⁴; in Hab. 1⁸ the Septuagint has the same reading, and in Jer. 5⁶ ἕως τῶν οἰκίων represents עַרַב בַּיִת = עַרַב בֵּית). 3⁴ μαρτύριον (cf. Peshitta)—לְעַר (לְעַר; cf. Vulgate, supra). 3¹² שארית יִשְׂרָאֵל is taken as the subject of the preceding verb by the Septuagint. 3¹⁶ ἐρεῖ Κύριος—יִאֲמַר (* יִאֲמַר was read and Κύριος was interpretatively added, cf. 3¹⁹). 3¹⁹ ἐν σοὶ ἐνεκέν σου—אֶת כָּל מַעֲנִיךָ—אֶתְּךָ (* אֶתְּךָ (לְמַעַנְךָ); τῆν ἐκπεπιεζμένην (cf. Peshitta)—הַצֶּלַע (cf. Mic. 4^{6,7}, Gen. 32²²); there are two roots צלע of which the γ is represented in Arabic by Dād and Ṭā respectively; the one may mean, to oppress; the other, to limp. The former is found in the Old Testament only in the noun צלע, rib; but the Septuagint suggests very plausibly that the word here and in Mic. 4^{6,7} be taken from the root that has the meaning of to oppress. Barth [Wurzeluntersuchungen . . . , pp. 39, 40] suggests the Arabic ضلّ as the cognate of the word here used). 3¹⁹ ἐν τῷ καιρῷ ὅταν εἰσδέξομαι—בְּעֵת קִבְצִי († בְּעֵת, cf. Vulgate).

(d) These readings, so far as they are not at once condemned by internal evidence, are suggestive for the interpretation of the text. Whether they are wrong or right, they shed additional light on the translations and translators. They also indicate the gradual crystallization of the tradition that grew up around the text, for departures from it decrease in the versions in the order of their rise.

§ II. The readings of the versions so far considered either agree with the current consonantal text, or else data are lacking to show that the text of which they are severally the translation varied from it. It is still necessary to consider the equivalents in regard to which there is positive evidence of disagreement. Many variants are by the context or by parallel passages shown to be due to the intentional or unintentional faithlessness of the translators to their copies, or to the defective character of the exemplars which they used. Those that are not thus condemned will represent each version's actual contribution to the textual criticism of Zephaniah.

(1) Most of the variants are reducible to the addition, omission, transposition, or change of single letters.

(a) 1¹⁴ tribulabitur—צרה (1¹⁶, 1¹⁷ and especially Am. 3¹¹ show that *צרה] was read; the rendering by the future is interpretative, cf. Am. 3¹¹, idem). 2¹⁴ robur ejus—ערה (*ענה, cf. Pr. 21²², Jer. 51⁶⁸; this change may be due to the punctuation of the preceding ארוה which Jerome adopted). 3¹ provocatrix—מוראה (*Quod significantius Hebraeice dicitur MARA, id est, παραπικραίνουσα—Jerome). 3¹⁰ filii—בת (בני; this may, however, be an inner-Latin corruption from filia). See further under (c) 2¹⁴.

(b) חוקיה—חוקיה (*חלקיה). 1¹⁰ ריגים—דיגים; this word is always so rendered in the Peshitta, when it occurs in connection with שער). See further under (c) 2^{2,2}, 3¹, 3¹⁷, 3¹⁷.

(c) 1⁸ oikos—בני (confusion between בית and בני is frequent; oikos = בני, Jer. 16¹⁸, Ez. 2⁸, I Chr. 2¹⁰; oikos = בית, Gen. 45¹¹, Ex. 16³¹, Jos. 17¹⁷, 18¹⁶, Hos. 1⁷). 1⁹ εμφανως—הרלג (it has been suggested that רגל or גלה was read; there may, however, be a corruption in Greek here. Perhaps a participial form of εμβαινω, i. e., εμβάντας, stood in the original Septuagint; cf. I Sam. 5⁶, Greek). 1¹⁰ ἀποκεντούντων—הרגים (*הרגים; cf. II Chr. 33¹⁴). 1¹⁴ σκληρά—צרה (the Septuagintist has translated a derivative of צרר, to be hard). 2² πρὸ τοῦ γενέσθαι ὑμᾶς (cf. Peshitta, מִבְּטָרָם = בטרם לא—(בטרם לא תרחקו and made use of the colorless γενέσθαι to translate the verb because he misread מוץ); ἄνθος—מוץ (*נץ); the omission of ים from the Septuagint (cf. Peshitta) may be due to a reading עברי(ים). 2⁹ πάροικοι—גוי (Pro GOI, id est, gente, ‘Septuagintes’ legerunt *GAR, hoc est, advenam—Jerome). 2¹⁴ κόρακες (cf. Vulgate)—חרב (ערב); τὸ ἀνάστημα αὐτῆς—ערה (*עירה, cf. Jer. 15⁸, Hos. 11⁹, Ψ 73²⁰; עור, to rouse, is rendered by ἐπανίστημι in Job 17⁹). 3¹ ἐπιφανής (cf. Peshitta and Syro-Hexapla)—מוראה (*גורא, cf. 2¹¹). 3⁹ ὑπερηφάνους—גויים († גאים). 3⁷ ἐξ ὀφθαλμῶν αὐτῆς (cf. Peshitta)—מעונה († מעניה); ἐτοιμάζου (cf. Peshitta) ὄρθρισον ἔφθαρται πᾶσα ἢ ἐπιφυλλίς αὐτῶν—אכן השכימו—(השכימו) ἔφθαρται—(השכימו) כל עלילותם (cf. the Vulgate rendering of the two verbs; *ברורה) εἰς γενεὰν αὐτῆς—ברורה (*ברורה). 3¹² ἐλαβηθήσονται—חכו (*הכו, cf. 1⁷ and Ne. 8¹¹; ἀπό = נ is due to this reading). 3¹⁷ ἐπάξει—ישׁי (*ישׁית; καινέ (cf. Peshitta)—יחריש († יחיש). 3¹⁸ τοὺς συντετριμμένους—מכץ (מכץ; with σοῦ in the Greek text, מכץ, cf. Ex. 5¹⁶); 3¹⁸ οὐαί—היו († הוי, cf. 2⁶); τίς ἔλαβεν—(מי ישׁא) († משׁאת).

reading of ענה, by which the Peshitta was led astray, seems to have caused the omission of the third בקשו. This verse is a good illustration of how the Septuagint influenced the Peshitta.

3¹⁰. עתרינת פוצי. The meaning of these words is not clear, and it is therefore more probable that they were omitted by the Septuagintist than that they were interpolated into the Hebrew subsequent to the time of translation. If προσδέξομαι ἐν διεσπαρμένοις μου, as has already been suggested, was in the original Septuagint, it was later omitted under Syriac influence. προσδέξομαι may be a corruption for προσεύξομαι (cf. Ju. 13⁸). ἐν διεσπαρμένοις μου seems to represent בְּנִפְּוֹצֵי (cf. II Chr. 18¹⁰), which agrees closely with the reading that the Vulgate seems to suggest (filiū dispersorum meorum—בְּנֵי פִּוּצֵי).

(4). In the three passages that remain to be considered the Hebrew is difficult, and help from the versions would be very welcome.

1³. et ruinae impiorum erunt—מִגְּדָלָם חֲסֵדִים אֶתְּלֵם—καὶ ἀσθενήσουσιν οἱ ἀσεβεῖς—והמכשלות את הרשעים. The versions all agree as to רשעים (cf. Peshitta, Num. 16²⁰), but each one gives it a different grammatical government. They also agree in regard to the root כשל (cf. Septuagint, Ez. 21²⁰), though not in regard to the form of it here to be read. The אַת, which is difficult, is not represented in the Septuagint or Vulgate, and the Peshitta seems to have read it as the first person imperfect of אַתָּה. Jerome wrote among other things in regard to these words, pro quo Sym. interpretatus est, et scandala cum impiis, ut subaudiatur, congregabuntur, sive deficient; Quinta autem ed., et infirmitas cum impiis deficiet. It would seem from this quotation that Jerome knew of the אַת in the text, and that the Vulgate translation is supposed to do justice to it. Though it is quite certain that this troublesome word is not represented in the Septuagint, it is impossible to determine what the Greek does represent. Perhaps the first word was read as a perfect with vau conversive; on this supposition the Hebrew has sometimes been corrected. The witness of the versions is contradictory and entirely inconclusive.

2⁶. Et erit funiculus maris requies pastorum, et caulae pecorum—וְהָיָה חֵטְלֵי הַיָּם לְרֵפוּת רֹעֵי הַבָּקָר וְהָיָה חֵטְלֵי הַבָּקָר לְרֵפוּת רֹעֵי הַבָּקָר—καὶ ἔσται κρήνη νομῆ ποιμνίων καὶ μάνδρα προβάτων—צון וגדרות צון—היתה חבל הים נות כרת רעים וגדרות צון—Whether היה or היתה was read by the translators, it is impossible to determine. The Vulgate has omitted כרת and read נחה for נות (requies is the constant translation of נחה). The Peshitta has interpreted the verse freely in accordance with its reading of כרת (Crete) adopted from the Septuagint. חבל הים is not represented in the Septuagint; the order of נות and כרת is reversed; כרת is read as a proper name; ποιμνίων translates רעים (cf. 2¹⁴ ποίμνια = עררים; αἱ νομαὶ τῶν ποιμένων = נאות הרעים, Am. 1², seems to indicate that ποιμνίων must be corrected to ποιμένων). Perhaps the addition of τῆς θαλάσσης (2⁷) is compensatory for the omission of חבל הים (cf. Peshitta). The difficulty of the translators seems to have focussed in כרת, which is a hapax legomenon. This word is by many regarded as a gloss on נות; to others both it and חבל הים seem superfluous. The impossibility of correcting the Hebrew by the versions is patent, but היתה חבל is inexplicable (the noun is always masculine except in this verse, cf. 2⁷). The wide divergence of the versions from the current Hebrew and from each other becomes clear when the various texts are placed side by side in translation:

(a) Revised Version—And the sea-coast shall be pastures, with cottages (caves; others, wells) for shepherds and folds for flocks.

(b) Vulgate—And the sea-coast shall be a place of rest (cf. Verg. A. III, 393) for shepherds, and a fold for sheep:

(c) Peshitta—And the sea-coast shall be a dwelling place, and Crete a pasture for flocks of sheep:

(d) Septuagint—And Crete shall be a pasture for flocks, and a fold for cattle.

2⁹. siccitas spinarum et acervi salis—קִלְסָה לְכַמְשֵׁךְ סַלְסֵף—~~מַמְסַק~~—Δαμασκὸς ἐκλελειμμένη ὡς θιμωνία ἀλός—ממשק חרול ומכרה מלח—ממשק חרול, and acervi is dependent on θιμωνία (Siccitas, quod Hebraeice MAMASAC; . . . MEM si mutetur et DALETH accipiatur, eadem litteras habet quas et Damascus; . . . θιμωνίαν, id est, acervum). The Peshitta seems to have read מלוח (Job 30⁴), mallow. חרול (Syriac, ܫܪܘܠ; cf. Prov. 24³¹, Lee, ܫܪܘܠ) was in contrast with מלוח, which grows wild, interpreted as cultivated grasses. מכרה was read as a passive form of כרת and translated as always by אֶפְרַיִם. A parallelism was produced by giving the remaining word a corresponding meaning. The relative and suffixes, as well as the conjunction and copula, of the next verse are interpretative additions. The Syriac is thus to be rendered: because their crop has been destroyed, and their wild grass has perished. The origin of Δαμασκός is explained by Jerome. ἐκλελειμμένη shows that חרל was read for חרל. θιμωνία shows that מכרה was derived from כרת in a sense preserved in the Aramaic (כר, כר) and the Assyrian (karū). ἄλος must, as has already been indicated, be read for ἄλωνος. While witnessing to the originality of the current Hebrew, the versions give absolutely no help in its interpretation.

CHAPTER VI.

CONCLUSION.

Everything in the versions that seemed to have a bearing on the criticism of the text has now been presented with as much fulness as it seemed to warrant. The nature of the material considered makes differences of opinion in regard to its proper distribution inevitable, but the necessity for some such scheme of classification as has been adopted will hardly be denied. The departures of the Vulgate from the Massoretic tradition which have been noted have no special merit, and of the readings in which it bears positive witness to a difference between its "Urtext" and the present Hebrew not one is worthy of consideration. In every case its witness to the text on which it is based (cf. 1⁴, 2^o), or the witness of that text itself (cf. 3¹), is unreliable. The Peshitta, when it is independent of the Septuagint, disagrees with the Massoretic tradition very infrequently, and the few variants that it offers are no more worthy of acceptance than are those of the Vulgate. So far as it can be controlled, the testimony of these two versions is in favor of the accurate transmission of the Hebrew from the time of their origin. This conclusion would perhaps need some revision, if the numerous non sequiturs due to the process of translation could be eliminated. To possess the manuscript or manuscripts used by the translators would therefore be of considerable advantage to Textual Criticism.

If the recovery of the sources of the Vulgate and the Peshitta is a thing to be desired, the possession of the source of the Septuagint is positively a sine qua non for the full understanding of the history of the Hebrew text of Zephaniah, for this translation is but a sorry equivalent for its original. It was not made by one who had a "genius for translation", for his general inaccuracy seems to have been even greater than his lack of knowledge, unless indeed he attempted to cover his ignorance by manipulating his text. Many of his translations call vividly to mind the hit or miss achievements of a school-boy whose pensum stands between him and the play-ground. Luther accused the Septuagintists, as a body, of "disdaining to speak the letters, words and style". To show the justice of this criticism as far as Zephaniah is concerned, one need only to remove the numerous faulty or wrong translations and interpretations from the Greek text; for hardly a verse will then remain intact. A comparison of the possible with the impossible variants in the consonantal text that it definitely supports shows that the attitude which must be maintained toward the Septuagint of Zephaniah is one of general distrust. It rarely agrees with the Massoretic text, where that text is difficult; but the alternates which it suggests are generally even less acceptable.¹ It cannot be appealed to as an infallible authority on hapax legomena, nor can the Hebrew lexicon be enriched by the meanings of rare words that it supports. Since the testimony of the Septuagint as to its source is so unreliable, its value for Textual Criticism is much less than it might be in view of the comparative nearness of its "Urtext" to the autograph. It is especially unfortunate in this case that the Septuagint does not speak with a more certain voice either in condemnation or confirmation because of the difficulties which the Hebrew presents.² The only general conclusion warranted by the facts is that the Septuagint offers no conclusive evidence that the "Lagardian archetype" was not the text on which it also was based. As far as the possibility of showing the contrary by external evidence goes, the present Hebrew text may well be that of the autograph of Zephaniah,¹ for the few parallels in thought and diction with other parts of the Old Testament to be found in the book are of no critical value (1⁶—Jer. 8²; 1¹²—Jer. 48¹¹; 1¹³—Am. 5¹¹; 1¹⁸—Ez. 7¹⁰; 2⁸—Is. 16⁶, Jer. 48^{26, 48}; 2^{14, 16}—Is. 13, ^{21, 22}, 34¹¹, 47^{8, 10}; 3⁴—Ez. 22²⁰; 3¹⁰—Is. 1¹⁸), and the versions offer not a single reading which absolutely demands acceptance.

¹ יחריש for יחריש (317) has gained wide acceptance, and yet against this possibly correct reading three positively wrong readings of ך or ך must be balanced in this book. (111, 29, 39).

² The difficulties in the Hebrew and in the interpretation of Zephaniah are briefly presented in Appendix I.

APPENDIX I.

THE "DIFFICULTIES" IN THE HEBREW TEXT OF ZEPHANIAH.

The words and phrases included in this list have occasioned a great deal of discussion. It may be safely affirmed that in regard to them nothing is certain.

1² אָסַף אָסַף. The infinitive absolute is from a different root than the finite verb. (אָסַף, Wellhausen; אָסַף, Nowack; cf. Ψ 104²⁰, Mi. 4⁹).

1³ אַת. The word stands between two nouns (אַתְּ הַכְשִׁלְתִּי אַתְּ, Oort).

1⁶ הַמְשַׁחֲוִים הַנִּשְׁבָּעִים. The juxtaposition of these two participles is awkward. (Some would omit the former, while others prefer to delete the latter). Ehrlich (Mikrâ Ki Pheschutô, III, p. 456) suggests that the use of different formulas of swearing is indicated by "נִשְׁבַּע ל' and נִשְׁבַּע ב'"; the former referring to the וי form, the latter to the אני form.

1⁹ הִרְלַג עַל מַפְתָּן. The Targum seems to connect the words with the custom of the Philistine worshippers of Dagon, I Sam. 1⁶; cf. Trumbull, The Threshold Covenant, 2d ed., p. 117. Ehrlich (p. 457) translates: die in den Vorzimmern herumscharwenzelen. He thinks that sycophants are referred to, and that they are compared to dogs leaping up and down at the threshold of their master.

1¹⁴ מָהַר. This word must be read as a participle (מָהַר, Wellhausen).

¹ The protests of Conjectural Criticism and Higher Criticism do not properly fall within the limits of the present inquiry, but a few remarks which seem not entirely uncalled for have been added in Appendix II.

1¹⁴ קל יום יהוה מר צרה נבור. The grammatical relation of these words to each other and to what precedes is obscure. (The conjecture of Grätz is rather heroic, יררח כנבור, קל יהוה יררח כנבור).

1¹⁷ לחם. The exact meaning of this word is unknown (cf. Job 20²³).

1¹⁸ נבהלה. נבהלה is the ordinary form.

2¹ התקושו וקושו. The meaning of the words is unknown.

2² is also uncertain (the Aramaic כסף means turn pale).

2³ בטרים with an infinitive occurs only here (in Is. 17¹⁴ and 28⁴ it is used with a noun), and the pleonastic use of לא with this conjunction is found nowhere else in the Old Testament.

2⁶ The word חבל seems to be feminine in this verse; in the next verse it is masculine. נות is found only in this verse; the usual form is נאות. כרת is a hapax legomenon of doubtful meaning (Ehrlich, כרקעת).

2⁷ It is not clear to whom the suffix of עליהם refers (על הים, Wellhausen).

2⁹ ממשק and מכרה are hapax legomena, and the meanings usually given to the words are conjectural.

2¹¹ The tense of רוה is difficult and its meaning is obscure.

2¹⁴ קל ישורר בחלון חרב בסף כי ארוה ערה. Ehrlich suggests that the כ of חרב is due to dittography, and he translates the first five words: es pfeift lustig zum Fenster hinein, zum Loch an den Pfosten.

3¹ In מראה the א is hard to explain.

3³ נרמו is by many regarded as a hapax legomenon (cf. Septuagint), others take the word as a denominative from גרם (cf. Nu. 24⁶, Ez. 23²⁴).

3⁴ בנרות is a hapax legomenon as to form.

3⁶ נצרו is a hapax legomenon.

3⁷ כל וגוי seems to hang in the air. (It has been proposed to read מעניה with the Septuagint, to change יכרת to יסתר, and to take על פקדתי in the sense of command, Lagarde.)

3¹⁰ עתרי is a hapax legomenon. בתפצי ?

3¹⁷ יחריש ב". A direct object for the verb seems necessary (יחריש, cf. Ψ 21⁷).

3¹⁸ There are two roots to which נוגי may be referred; of these one means to be grieved, the other, to be removed. The two translations offered by the Revised Version illustrate the extreme obscurity of this verse.

3¹⁹ עשה-את is unusual (Grätz suggests that כלה be added, cf. 1¹⁸).

The grammatical governments of בשתם is not clear (Nöldeke proposed to delete the final ם of שמתים and to take בשתם as its object).

APPENDIX II.

THE CONJECTURAL TEXTUAL CRITICISM AND HIGHER CRITICISM OF THE TEXT OF ZEPHANIAH.

§ I. No one can say what may or may not happen to a text transmitted in manuscript, and therefore not even the wildest conjecture can be dismissed as impossible; but it is equally true, even though the contrary seems to be implied in the confident assertions of some, that the fact that Zephaniah may have expressed a thought in a certain form or written a sentence in a certain way does not actually prove that he did so write or express it. The relative plausibility of the readings which it has been proposed to substitute for those in the current Hebrew can be more or less accurately gauged. In Appendix I the conjectures that have something positive to recommend them have already been noted. A free reconstruction of the text obtained by raising poetical measure¹ or the demands of a fantastic theory² into a canon of Textual Criticism has hardly more validity than have the results of an entirely arbitrary change, transposition and recombination of letters.³ The changes which show only what the critic thinks Zephaniah ought to have said can with safety be dismissed from serious consideration.¹

³ Bachmann (Zur Textkritik des Propheten Zephanja, S.K; 1894) has emended 2^{10-2a} to read: הגיו לא בכספ . . . מלדת.

§ II. This free Conjectural Criticism of the text gives much support to and gains much help from the Higher Criticism, which dissects an ancient document according to subjective standards of style and thought-cogency. The integrity of Zephaniah has often been denied. The following summary condensed from the article Zephaniah by J. A. Selbie in Hastings' Dictionary of the Bible needs very little comment.² Keunen was inclined to regard 3¹⁴⁻²⁰ as post-exilic on account of differences both in tone and situation from the rest of the prophecy. Stade denied to Zephaniah 2^{1,2,11} and the whole of chapter 3. Wellhausen (compare Nowack) suspected 2^{2,3}, rejected 2⁸⁻¹¹ and treated chapter 3 as a later supplement added in two stages (1-7 and 8-20). Budde (followed by Cornill, Einleitung, 3d edition) admitted 2^{1,2}, 3^{1-5,7,8,9,11-13} as in harmony with Zephaniah's situation; he rejected 2⁴⁻¹² mainly because Israel appears as the victim, not as the perpetrator of wrong; he excluded 3^{9,10} as breaking the connection between 3⁸ and 3¹¹; he declared 3¹⁴⁻²⁰ to be a later lyrical epilogue. Schwally allowed to Zephaniah chapter 1, 2¹³⁻¹⁵ and perhaps 2¹⁻⁴, holding 2⁵⁻¹² to be exilic and chapter 3 post-exilic, though 3¹⁻⁷ may be Zephaniah's. G. A. Smith denied to Zephaniah 2⁸⁻¹¹, 3^{9,10} and 3¹⁴⁻²⁰. Driver remarked that 2¹¹ seemed to be somewhat out of place and that 3¹⁴⁻²⁰ is somewhat doubtful, though the 'question remains whether it is sufficiently clear that the imaginative picture was beyond the power of Zephaniah to construct.' Davidson defended the genuineness of chapter 2 as a whole, but considered it quite possible that it had been expanded in various places; he allowed that 3¹⁰ should possibly be omitted, but otherwise 3¹⁻¹³ appeared to him to be genuine, although they might suggest that the passage was later than chapter 1; in 3¹⁴⁻²⁰ he recognized quite a different situation from the rest of the book. König would apparently accept the whole of the book except the title which refers the prophecy to the days of Josiah.

This paragraph is an unintended, though on that account no less positive, refutation of the method by which such conflicting results are achieved. One can hardly repress the thought that a great deal of these "assured results" is due to the endeavor of each latest critic to justify his rediscussion of the subject by presenting something different from that which his predecessors have said. It would seem from this paragraph that the book in its present form is but a sorry piece of patchwork; and yet the writer of the article Zephaniah in Smith's Dictionary of the Bible expressed the opinion that "the chief characteristics of this book are the unity and harmony of the composition, the grace, energy and dignity of its style, and the rapid and effective alternations of threats and promises." The critics themselves being witnesses, there is not a single verse which Zephaniah could not have written, and therefore one who is not anxious to father anything new can defend the integrity of the book by choosing his "authorities" with discrimination. The writer is free to confess that he is interested in the whole text, which may be Zephaniah's Zephaniah, rather than in that part of it which in the opinion of each critic a Zephaniah, who was on the plane of religious evolution which he thinks his age had attained, who possessed the mentality with which he is pleased to endow him, and who wrote as he himself would have written under similar circumstances, could or ought to have produced. The arguments and counter-arguments advanced for and against the genuineness of the many verses discussed are all singularly pointless and are invalid to overthrow the presumption established in favor of the integrity of the book by the mere fact that some one gave it its present form; for to that man's mind the book was a unit and the ease with which critics brush aside the arguments of critics demonstrates that an unbiased Higher Criticism can not show that the man in question was not the Zephaniah to whom the book has so long been attributed. Arguments based on the style of a writer known only through his works are notably precarious, even though he has left extensive literary remains. The psychological law of the Association of Ideas utterly condemns all argumentation based on thought development alone, for it shows that no combination or contrast of ideas—even abrupt change from threat to promise—is impossible. Zephaniah has left at most fifty-three verses; it is surely absurd to build up one's conception of the man out of the first eighteen that are assumed to be his; and to use the conception of his style and capacities thus gained as a standard to determine which of the remaining verses he could and which he could not have written. Judged by present standards, strong arguments can be advanced to show that 3^{1-5b} originally stood between the two halves of 1¹²:

(a). In the present text it is difficult to determine where the arraignment of Nineveh ends and that of Jerusalem begins. The Peshitta has actually referred 3¹ to Nineveh, and the present chapter division of the Septuagint shows that 2¹⁵ was referred to Jerusalem by its author.

(b). The nexus between the second and third clauses of 3⁵ does not seem to be very close, but 3^{5c} in that it would emphasize the absolute hopelessness of Nineveh's condition would be an admirable conclusion to 2¹⁵.

(c). 3¹ continues in the style of 1¹¹ and 3^{2-5b} contain the full charge on which the punishment threatened in 1^{12b} is based.

The ipsi dixerunt of the critics have no greater objective validity than those for this transposition have. A detailed discussion of all the points involved in this seemingly endless discussion would lead far into the theory of Israel's religious development, whose exigencies seem to demand such excisions (2³⁻¹¹, 3⁸⁻¹¹) as are not based on purely subjective considerations, and therefore the reader who seeks for arguments of this kind to support his belief in the integrity of the book must be left to find them in the works of such champions as each verse or verse-group has found.¹
